MAGISTER, MELCHIOR NEUSIDLER PART 9 - GATHERING PEASCODS - ROGERO - LA VECCHIA - PAGANINA

MAGISTER DANTZ - HUDSON 7

Here are all the settings I know of another item from Richard Hudson's list of popular Deutsch Dantz.¹ It is known from only a few sources of German origin and was also transmitted to Italy and The Netherlands. Its German title Magister Dantz is preserved in one source, Elias Ammerbach's Orgel oder Instrument Tabulaturbuch published in Nürnberg in 1583 but in other German sources is simply titled Tantz in Weissel's lute print of 1591 and untitled in the Elizabeth Romers lute book (identical to the first half of the version Adriaenssen used in his print so possibly copied from it). Settings for lute, keyboard and instrumental ensemble are found in Italy titled Alamande or Tedescha, the latter meaning of German origin or allemande, the one for lute in the Herold lute book copied in Padua in 1602. The largest number of sources are found in the Netherlands in settings for lute, cittern and instrumental ensemble often with the title Almande Poussinghe, the origin of which is not clear to me. The sources from The Netherlands are the prints of Phalèse and Vreedman published in Louvain from 1569 to 1583, Adriaenssen published in Antwerp in 1584, reprinted in 1600, and van den Hove published in Utrecht in 1601. The manuscript sources are handwritten additions to the Bodleian Library copy of Phalèse Theatrum Musicum of 1563² and the Thysius lute book copied by Adriaan Smout from the 1590s onwards where it is mistitled Almande Spiers.³ The semiquaver passages in H7b/c/f are a reminder that tantz and allemande were slow dances.

MELCHIOR NEUSIDLER PART 9

The Melchior Neusidler series continues with an intabulation (MN9b) and parody fantasia on it (MN9a) both in A minor found in his Teutsch Lautenbuch published in Strasbourg in 1574 which has been assumed to be his own intabulation and fantasia.⁵ However, the intabulation seems to be a reworking of an earlier source (see below). The intabulation is of Cipriani de Rore's 4-voice madrigal 'Anchor che col partire io mi sento morire' [Although when I part from you it is a kind of dying] first published in 1547. The version here is one of two anonymous close concordances in manuscripts differing only in embellishment. This one is in a manuscript in Munich comprising pages of handwritten additions taken from several printed German lute books and copied c.1550-1580 (D-Mbs Mus.1627). Also included is an unrelated glossa in A minor from the Barbarino manuscript of Neapolitan provenance (MN9app 1).

In addition to Melchior's version, another twelve lute settings of Anchor che col partire in A minor are found in five manuscript sources and seven printed lute books, including Vincenzo Galilei Fronimo published in 1568 and the latest Emmanuel Adriaenssen Pratum Musicum reprinted in 1600. Surprisingly, the versions in all these sources share many identical bars and passages but differ in the extent of embellishment and so are derivatives of the same intabulation. It seems reasonable to suggest that it was originally made by Vincenzo Galilei as he did include instructions on methods for intabulation of vocal works for the lute in Fronimo, so he is unlikely to have been the one that borrowed it. Interestingly, the intabulations in the two books each of Phalèse and Adriaenssen are not identical but the later ones are further reworkings of the versions used in their earlier prints. Also, the manuscript sources are concordant but not identical to any of the prints. However, the settings in Johann Rude Flores Musicae 1600 and Jean-Baptiste Besard Thesaurus Hamonicus 1603 are two different and distinct settings. The observation of multiple variants of a single lute intabulation of a one vocal model may or may not be generalisable to other lute intabulations, and confirmation awaits detailed study of more examples. However, this is an example of the work of only one or a few intabulator which was then circulated widely, rather than composers all intabulating it independently. There is also a distinct intabulation in a different tonality (G minor) found in Jean Paul Paladin's Premier Livre de Tablature de Luth published in Lyon in 1560 and copied almost identically without ascription c.1565 into the autograph manuscript of Giovanni Pacaloni of Padua where it is accompanied by a parody fantasia in G minor not found in Paladin's prints, also included here (MN9app 2). Reworkings of this too are found in six further sources, one with text and an added voice part and so either Paladin was the original intabulator or maybe he reworked it from an existing source so the intabulator is not known.

The dance titled Der Nerrisch/Närrisch Caspar, subtitled the King in Poland's dance, is in A minor and ascribed to Melchior by initials MN only. The setting is unique to one of the Donaueschingen manuscripts, probably copied at the Munich court c.1580-1595, but a simple and distinct setting in G minor is found in the lute book of Emanuel Wurtsen from Basel (MN9app 3), both probably arrangements of an existing popular dance. The title probably refers to 'Blazeński Kasper' in Polish or 'Der Närrisch Caspar' in German [Clownish Caspar], a stock character from the German farce tradition dating back to the Middle Ages.⁶

⁶ Thank you to Arthur Ness for suggesting the connection with Caspar the Polish/German Theatrical comic character. The title presumably does not refer to the Polish composer Caspar/Kaspar Sielicki - for seven of his known lute solos see the tablature supplement to Lute News 82 (June 2007) and the posthumous article by Piotr Pozniak 'Kaspar Sielicki, ein polnischer Lautenspieler-Komponist' Die Laute XII (2017), pp. 39-61. Three more pieces ascribed to him ('Caspari Sieliczkego') have turned up since in the lute book of Nicolai Ficció in the Stadtbibliothek Braunschweig (D-BSstb C.39.20).

To accompany the music by John Johnson found in continental sources in Lute News 135, here is a bandora (transcribed) part of JJ3 and two additional settings of the Old Medley (JJ7i & JJ7j) from continental sources. I also planned to include the consort lute parts of Johnson's Flat Pavan (JJ3) but these will be deferred until a later Lutezine to make room here for all the other versions I know of Gathering peascods (JJ6), as well as La Vecchia Pavan (JJ2) and Galliard and its model, Paganina, and an additional solo and duet on Rogero by John Johnson including a continental source together with all the other settings I know.

GATHERING PEASCODS

The country dance Gathering peascods, referring to the season for harvesting peas or similar in the rural working calendar,⁹ is set as a country dance for violin in John Playford's The Dancing Master of 1651 and all subsequent editions. The first two bars are the same as one of the two ballad tunes known as All in a garden green / Onder de Lindegrone.¹⁰ It may not have been used as a ballad tune as no text or reference to a ballad called Gathering peascods, or examples of other ballads calling for the tune are known but the music is found in instrumental settings for lute, bandora and keyboard from the 1590s onwards under several alternative titles. Settings of essentially the same music are titled The Gathering of pescodes in the Board lute book and Brande Piscet (probably a corruption of the English title) / Chanson Angloise in Valerius' Nederlandische Ghedenck-Clanck published in Haarlem in 1626. It is also called Johnsons Toy and Jo Johnsons Allmaine in settings for lute or bandora, so either John Johnson composed the music that became a popular country dance under the title Gathering peascods, or more likely he arranged music that was already known. Either way he presumably intended it for lute and someone else then arranged it for bandora retaining the ascription to him. It is also known by the title Allins Jig and although it is not in jig form¹¹ it is assumed to refer to Edward Alleyn (1566-1626) a celebrated actor on the Elizabethan stage. He is a more likely candidate than the professional singer John Alleyn 'that most excellent tenor voyce, and exact singer (her maties seruant, mr. Io. Allin)' who sang the song 'If all the ages of the earth' by Alfonso Ferrabosco (II) in Ben Jonson's Queens Masque performed in the Whitehall Banqueting House in 1609.¹² Presuming that it was for Edward Alleyn, it may have been used as his signature tune during his performances and its use on stage would explain its inclusion as an untitled lute setting in D-B 4022, a manuscript of Gdansk provenance that probably includes English music brought by troupes of English actors that are recorded as visiting Gdansk frequently between 1600 and 1619.¹³ Eight sources are included here (repeating those that were in Lute News 135), six for lute, one for bandora (a transcription for lute was in Lute News) and one arranged from Playford's violin melody.¹⁴

ROGERO

Rogero is the title of English instrumental settings of a descant on the ground¹⁶ of an Italian song called Ruggiero, two included here as Rapp 1 & 2 and all the other lute settings will be in a Lutezine in the future. George Gascoigne refers to it in 'The Adventures of Master F. J.' included in his Hundred Flowres published in 1573, when the hero Ferdinando 'taking into his hand a Lute that lay on his Mistresse bed, did unto the note of the Venetian galliard apply the Italian dittie written by the worthy Bradamante unto the noble Rugier, as Ariosto hath it: Ruggiero, qual sempre fui &c' - which is canto 44 line 61 of Ludovico Ariosto's epic poem Orlando Furioso (in which Bradamante is the knight heroine) published in 1532 and in English translation in 1591. In 1586 William Webbe refers to the popularity of setting ballads to the tune of Rogero in his Discourse of English Poetrie of 1586, in his comment that 'The seauenth sorte is a verie tragicall mournfull measure, wherein he bewyleth the death of some freend vnder the person of Dydo. ... These sortes of verses for breuities sake haue I chosen foorth of him, wherby I shall auoide the tedious rehearsall of all the kinds which are vsed: which I thinke would have beene vnpossible, seeing they may be altered to as manie formes as the Poets please: neither is there anie tune or stroke which may be sung or plaide on instruments, which hath not some poetical ditties framed according to the numbers thereof, some to Rogero, some to Trenchmore, to downe right Squire, to Galliardes, to Pauines, to Iygges, to Brawles, to all manner of tunes which euerie Fidler knowes better then my selfe, and therefore I will let them passe'. For another Italian ground popular in England see La Vecchia/Paganina below. Examples of the use of Rogero in books include Richard Jones's Handefull of pleasant delites of 1584, first published in 1566 but now lost, in which number twenty eight is 'A faithfull vow of two constant Lovers sung To the new Rogero' beginning 'Shall distance part our loue, or daily choice of change' (new probably signifies revival of the tune rather than implying that it was different to an old rogero which is nowhere so named), and in Strange Histories of 1602 Thomas Deloney included 'The Kentishmen with long tayles Cant. I or to the tune of: Rogero' beginning 'The valiant courage and policie of the Kentishmen with long tayles'. And Richard Johnson's Golden Garland of Princely Pleasures of 1620 includes 'A Lamentable Song of Lady Elinor, daughter to the Duke of Buckingham, who dyed for loue of one Captaine Ienkenson that had been a Prentise of London, who went to the siege of Ierusalem with Edward the first, then King of England To the tune of Rogero' beginning 'In England liued once a Duke, That had a daughter braue'. However, Tobias Hume disparages arrangements based on Italian grounds in his address 'To the vnderstanding

Reader' of The First Part of Ayres of 1605 (sig. B2v), repeated in Poetical Musicke 1607 (sig. G1v), proudly declaring that 'my studies are farre from serule imitations, I rob no others inuentions, I take no Italian Note to an English Dittie, or filch fragments of Songes to stuffe out my volumes'. Rogero was nevertheless frequently called for to accompany ballads from the sixteenth to the eighteenth century. Between them Broadside Ballads Online at the Bodleian and the English Broadside Ballad Archive at the University of California Santa Barbara,¹⁷ catalogue at least forty three prints and reprints of ballad sheets of nine distinct texts set to the tune of Rogero from the 1570s to the late eighteenth century.¹⁸

Although sharing bars in places, seven distinct solo settings of Rogero for lute are known with between one and four variations. All are anonymous except for a fragment of half of a single statement (reconstructed here) ascribed to John Johnson (R6). The solos are in C major (R2, R3, R5 and two sources of R1) or F major (R7), the latter the only one in a continental source and probably influenced by the English Rogero rather than the original Italian Rugiero. A bandora solo (or is it a ground?) is in the Dallis lute book (R8i), also transcribed for lute here (R8ii). Two treble and ground duets are also known one by John Johnson, in G major - all four sources included (R10ia-d), one of them found in a continental source and quite different in places and lacking the final triple time variation.¹⁹ The other treble and ground duet is anonymous and in C major (R4) and both the trebles lack surviving grounds which have been reconstructed by others (R4ii, R10iia). The four sources of R10 are nearly identical, but the fourth variation of five is missing in R10a, and R10d is incomplete, terminating halfway through bar 22 due to a missing page. One keyboard setting and four for solo cittern (R12-15) are also known, as well as a bass viol part comprising a single statement of the ground, in one of Mathew Holmes' consort books (R16). Lyle Nordstrom classified the first four items in Holmes' cittern part book to be cittern solos and they are complete in themselves, but it is curious that Rogero is the first piece copied in Dd.14.24 as well as the first in the bass viol part book Dd.5.20, suggesting they were related.²⁰

LA VECCHIA

Lute News 135 included John Johnson's solo setting of La Vecchia pavan in G major (JJ2a/b) on a ground spread over the three strains related to the passomezzo antico (i-VII-i-V-III-VII-i/V-i), and all the other versions of the pavan and its paired galliard are included here. The anonymous solo settings of the pavan are in C major and are more satisfactory than Johnson's solo which has running melodic passages more like a consort part. A simple setting without divisions is in the Dallis lute book (LP2) and one with divisions is concordant between several English sources that mostly differ in ornamentation and fingering indications (LP1a-d). Two more solos are in continental sources, a delightful setting in the Königsberg lute book (LP3) and an elaborate setting probably arranged by Joachim van den Hove for his Florida published in Utrecht in 1600 (LP4).²⁴ Two settings are for bandora, a consort part, in the Königsberg lute book (LP11) that carries enough of the tune to pass as a solo, and a more accomplished setting with divisions in Mathew Holmes' first lute book (LP5), both transcribed for lute here and the original of LP3 included for bandora players as it is a great solo for the instrument. In fact, although anonymous, the figuration is reminiscent of Anthony Holborn who did compose for bandora, including an arrangement of a lute Pavan by John Johnson (JJ1 in Lute News 135) the bandora setting ascribed to Holborn (GB-Cu Dd.2.11, f. 69r Panen A: Holburn). Three accomplished arrangements are also known for cittern (LP8-10), one in the Otley cittern book and two similar but distinct settings in Anthony Holborn's Citharn Schoole of 1597 and so probably made by him. Three lute duets all in G major are also included here. In addition to his lute solo, a duet for equal lutes is ascribed to John Johnson (LP6), found in four sources (both parts together only in one), all nearly identical so only one of each part is reproduced here. Matthew Holmes' book of consort and duet parts for lute also includes what has been assumed to be a consort lute part, but it looks more like a treble to me entirely lacking any harmony in the strains or divisions until the final chord (LP7), so I have treated it as a treble and used the bass viol part from the Walsingham consort books as a ground, played on lute or bass viol.

Three lute settings and an orphan mixed consort cittern part of the paired La Vecchia galliard are known: an anonymous solo in the Marsh lute book (LG1) assumed to be by John Johnson to go with his lute solo, and two equal duets, one anonymous (LG2) and the other ascribed to John Johnson (LG3).

¹⁹ R10ic in the Thysius lute book: the first variation is identical to the English settings, the second differs in a few bars but then the third and fourth are very different and corrupt (reconstructed by combining two bars into one at bar 37 and omitting a bar each between 40-41 and 55-56, although they still do not seem to fit the ground).

²⁴ Hove omitted the first half of the division on the B strain, duplicated here from the first statement of the B strain.

PAGANINA

An arrangement of the Italian tune Paganina on variants of the passamezzo antico ground was first published as Pass'e mezzo della Paganina / Saltarello in a setting for instrumental ensemble in Giorgio Maniero Il Primo Libro di Balli (Venezia 1578). As well as providing the model for La Vecchia in England, sixteen lute settings in four different tonalities/keys all titled Paganina or similar from Italy and Germany are known to me and included here, comprising a diverse and fascinating range of settings that are rewarding to play. Over half the sources have an accompanying triple time dance, and several sources are corrupt lacking bar lines and/or rhythm signs but have been reconstructed as far as possible using the more accurate sources as a guide. Strummed settings of Paganina for 5-course baroque guitar were also included in several seventeenth century prints, including Montesardo Nuova inventione d'intavolatura 1606, Colonna Intavolatura di chitarra alla spagnuola 1620, Foscari Libro secondo Intavolatura di chitarra spagnola 1629 and Libro Primo Intavolatura di sonate nuovamente tradotte sopra la Chitarra Spagnuola Trombetti 1639.²⁸

APPENDIX

Six additional items here are page fillers, two with similar titles to works by John Johnson and found in a commonplace book that predates him as it includes lute tablature in three hands copied c.1559-1571, and later inscribed on the verso of the first page 'money owing to Giles Lodge 1591': App 1 is titled A flatte pavione. App 5 has the title Labeckae and could be a setting of the music for the dance tune 'Com hither when I cole or labeca' in the list of dance tunes from the 1590s that were used at Llewenni Hall in North Wales, home of the courtier John Salusbury (c.1566-1612).³¹ The music is not known from elsewhere, and although many ballads begin 'Come hither', they all then deviate from the title 'Come hither when I call or Labeckae'.

Markus Lutz kindly sent me a pdf of all the photographs of the lost lute book associated with Joachim Loss (D-Dl 1.V.8) that were taken by Franz Giesbert (1896-1972) that surfaced recently. I recognized previously unidentified settings of two works by John Dowland: Orlando Sleepeth (App 2), DowlandCLM 61, all other versions edited for Lute News 102 (July 2012), and the Earl of Essex Galliard (App 3), DowlandCLM 42, all other versions edited for Lute News 107 (October 2013). Both lack divisions, and App 3 is closely concordant with English sources, but App 2 is an unusual setting unlike any of the others whether in English or continental sources. App 4 is from a manuscript appended to a copy of Besard's Thesaurus Harmonicus of 1603 owned by Joannis Caspar Straminej Otto in 1608, now in Bautzen, and is probably another example of English music used by troupes of actors travelling on the continent, other examples of which also occurs elsewhere in the manuscript. App 6 is an anonymous 'Turkish' gagliarda, the title possibly reflecting its use in an Italian ballo or similar staged event.

³⁰ This and App 6 are anonymous but reminiscent of distinctive figuration found in the music of Santino Garsi da Palma (all edited for Lute News and Lutezine 111 October 2014) and music by him is in the same manuscript.
